Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue calls for papers which will explore the importance of subjective wellbeing (swb) in the context of sustainability. Contributions will be informed by questions around the contribution of sustainability for swb as well as the potential for swb to achieve sustainability. Topics include, but are not limited to how we can conceptualise and measure swb to inform sustainability; the importance of enhancing swb to achieve sustainability and the extent to which sustainability initiatives can achieve this; the potential for swb to provide a new narrative for sustainability; or the role of individual and collective swb in achieving the changes needed for sustainability.

- Subjective wellbeing
- Sustainability
- Transformative change
- Sustainable development goals
- Relational wellbeing
- Human-environment interdependencies
