

Special Issue

Corporate Social Responsibility and Environmental Resource Governance

Message from the Guest Editors

Corporate social responsibility (CSR) has always played an important role in promoting social welfare and achieving positive social impacts, and the implementation of corporate environmental responsibility (CER) reflects the attitude and method of corporate environmental governance. This Special Issue calls for in-depth exploration of issues related to CSR and environmental resource management, aiming to create a series of rigorous research papers to explore and examine what conditions and mechanisms can promote the role of CSR in green and sustainable development. The scope of this Special Issue includes, but is not limited to:

- The dynamic interaction between CSR and environmental management activities in different development stages of corporations;
- The impact of environmental regulation policy on environmental responsibility and environmental performance;
- Environmental resource governance and sustainable development of corporations or regions;
- Implementation of CER under the background of digital transformation;
- ESG performance and corporate sustainable development;
- Corporate environmental governance under the vision of carbon peaking and neutrality goals.
