Special Issue

Post-disaster Recovery and Climate Change Adaptation – an Asia-Pacific Perspective

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to present a platform for the exchange of the latest research and practices in postdisaster recovery and climate change adaptation in the Asia-Pacific region. Themes of particular interest include reasons for current inadequacies and contextspecific challenges contributing to failed recovery and adaptation in the region, lessons learnt from past disaster experiences, innovative post-disaster reconstruction and recovery practices, and sustainable and practical solutions for adapting to climate change that are applicable to the Asia-Pacific region. We are seeking articles duly addressing environmental, cultural, economic and social aspects of post-disaster recovery and climate change adaptation within the scope of Sustainability. Original research articles and reviews are welcome. Research areas may include (but are not limited to) the following:

- Post-disaster reconstruction and recovery:
- Disaster preparedness and resilience:
- Disaster risk reduction;
- Building back better;
- Building back safer;
- Climate change adaptation;
- Climate-resilient development;
- Participatory methods;
- Indigenous knowledge;
- Nature-based solutions.
