Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The possibility of Lorentz and/or CPT symmetry breaking began to be intensively discussed about thirty years ago. There are numerous factors that have called attention to such studies. First, any physical theory, including special and general relativity, should have some limits of applicability, which clearly establish the question of their determination. In particular, such an interest has been supported by studies of elementary particles, where the violation of various symmetries, for example, CP-symmetry, for certain processes has been proved.
