Message from the Guest Editor

Modeling groundwater flows is a major challenge in understanding transport and reactivity. Water recharge and vulnerability can be assessed using mechanistic models and environmental tracers. Scientific outcomes from groundwater modelers can help support groundwater managers and decision makers in evaluating groundwater vulnerability and in implementing measures aiming to protect water resources.[...]

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

In the context of global changes, the sustainable management of water cycles, going from global and regional water cycles to urban, industrial and agricultural water cycles, plays a very important role on the water resources and on their relationships with food, energy, biodiversity, ecosystem functioning and human health. Water invites authors to provide innovative original full articles, critical reviews and timely short communications and to propose special issues devoted to new technological and scientific domains and to interdisciplinary approaches of the water cycles. We ensure a critical review process and a quick turnaround between submission and final decision.
